

The Blog Libific is Live!

Peter McCracken, librarian and co-founder of Serials Solutions, authors new blog

February 15 –Serials Solutions' co-founder has launched a blog on the Serials Solutions website with the purpose of providing librarians with useful information, most about librarianship, that is worth reading. In addition, librarians can offer their opinions on the variety of library-oriented topics that Peter chooses to discuss through the blog, at any time.

Peter has already forayed into the electronic airspace by sharing his opinions on a variety of subjects within the e-resources access and management marketplace. Such entries already include titles such as:

- The Blog Libific
- Highlighting Your Print Collection
- Journal Abbreviations: Why, Why, Why
- Getting (or not getting) Google Books Data: Parts 1 & 2

The Blog Libific also includes links to several other blog sites that focus on the library industry, and provides individuals to add links to their own blogs. Blogs currently listed include:

- ACRLog
- ALA TechSource
- Annoyed Librarian
- Baby Boomer Librarian
- blogwithoutalibrary.net
- Free Range Librarian
- The Krafty Librarian
- Library 2.0
- Library Journal Blogs
- Library Garden
- Librarian in Black
- Libraryman
- Library Stuff
- LITA Blog
- Lorcan Dempsey's weblog
- Overdue Ideas
- The Shifted Librarian
- Stephen's Lighthouse
- TALS Developers Network
- Tame the Web
- Weibel Lines
- ZSR Library Blog

Visit the blog at <http://blog.serialssolutions.com/> and post your own comment to one of Peter's entries.